This book was developed by the Northwest Native American Curriculum Project, sponsored by The Evergreen Center for Educational Improvement at The Evergreen State College and the Office of Indian Education at the Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. The project was partially funded by the Washington State Higher Education Coordinating Board.
When Charlie was still in his mother’s womb, he heard the soft beating of his mother’s heart.

Boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, boom
After Charlie came into the world, he heard the sound again in the Longhouse as his uncles beat the hand drum.

Boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, boom...
Charlie loved to hear the drum beat at celebrations and special times.

Boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, bram, boom
Charlie’s grandmother explained that the drum was like the pulse of life; like the rhythms of everything around him.

Boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, bram, boom
When Charlie was old enough, he made his own hand drum from cedar wood and the skin of a deer.

Boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, bram, boom...
Charlie learned the stories, dances, and songs of his Tribe. He used his drum as he sang and danced.

Boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, boom...
When Charlie was a young man, he held his drum for his own son to play out the rhythms of life.

Boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, bram, boom, boom...
